Dear Jeff:

We are fortunate through our International Association to be able to hear some outstanding speakers who inform and motivate. Sometimes we are disappointed when we meet the individual and find that they are not the warm, genuine people that they appeared to be on stage. I was especially fortunate to be given the privilege to introduce you and work with you as moderator. I was impressed with your good manners and your neat appearance to begin with. When you spoke to the convention center personnel about the set-up you would like, it was obvious that you know how to deal with people. You did not make demands, and where there were limitations you readily agreed to a compromise set-up.

When we arrived for the first seminar in the morning and the set-up was not as agreed, you did not get upset, but worked with what was provided. You demonstrated that you not only teach 'getting along with people', but you PRACTICE it in the best manner possible.

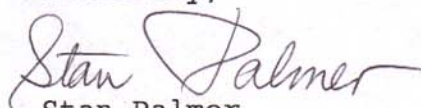

The way you relate to an audience is unusual. You are obviously sincere in what you teach, and people sense that sincerity immediately. Many comments were made to me that you seem to know more about Lionism than most Lions do. You incorporated elements of our Association and comments from a keynote speaker, and others by name, into your presentation in such a manner that you got and held their attention.

Your clever use of audience participation helps to keep the attention of the audience, and helps them to retain the information.

Jeff, your content, your delivery, your high standard of "Professionalism" and your pleasing personality make you one of the most outstanding and memorable speakers I have heard.

It was a pleasure to work with you, and I highly recommend you to other possible clients.

Sincerely,

Stan Palmer
